- EdTech startup focused on practical tech skills.
- Affordable, project-based learning platform.
- Students build real-world products and portfolios.
- Opportunities to earn while learning.
- Hybrid learning & mentorship for personalized support.

MARKET OPPORTUNITY

- High demand for job-ready professionals.
- Boot camps and finishing schools are too costly
- The rise of remote work creates a large market for platforms that train and place tech talent.
- The EdTech market is projected to reach $404 billion by 2025
- Existing platforms lack hands-on experience and portfolio-building

PROBLEMS TO BE SOLVED

- Students lack practical skills and portfolios required to secure jobs in tech fields.
- Traditional education often doesn't focus on real-world applications and hands-on experience.
- High costs of finishing schools and post-graduate training centres, which not all students can afford.
- Lack of opportunities for students to earn during learning

SOLUTION

- NoTime provides a unique platform that blends learning with real-world project development.
- Students will be able to acquire technical skills, build portfolio-worthy projects, and potentially earn money through their creations.
- The business offers a hybrid model: online learning with peer collaboration and regular offline meet-ups for enhanced engagement.
- The platform is affordable, provides mentoring, and integrates a ranking system that motivates students to excel.

MARKET

- Target Audience: Students in colleges and recent graduates looking for practical tech education and portfolio-building opportunities.
- Global Reach: The rise of remote work allows students to work and collaborate with companies globally, significantly increasing job prospects.
- Expanding Middle Class: As more students seek to gain marketable skills, NoTime provides an affordable solution for emerging markets with limited access to high-cost education.

COMPETITORS

Udemy/Coursera

- Online platforms
- Affordable courses
- But they lack personalized guidance and hands-on project-based learning

Brototype

- Finishing school
- Intensive tech training
- expensive.

Training programs

- High fees
- No earning opportunities

BUSINESS MODEL

- Student Fees: Students pay a subscription fee when they onboard (e.g., monthly course fees).
- Stake in Products: The platform takes a share of revenue from products or services that students build and sell.
- Future Partnerships: Plan to partner with colleges to help students secure remote jobs after graduation, earning a commission when students are getting placed.
